The participants discussed on why do we always have the perception that other people's lives are better than ours? Why are we constantly trying to find something better? Why we are never satisfied with what we have? And why, oh why does the grass always seem greener on the other side??

The answer is simple.

When we observe other people's lives, it is usually only for a little while. And in that little while, we will probably see these people at their best behavior and we immediately form a good impression of them. All we usually get is a tiny inkling of how they really are, and most of the times, we like it. But, as you get to know someone better, we realize - hey, this person is messed up. They have all these problems and issues, small issues, but they have issues. WE ALL HAVE ISSUES!! We are not perfect, we all say things we shouldn't, we all do things we shouldn't and we all make mistakes. Hence we need to change our perception our way of looking at things and then the grass would be green in our side too..!!

Luck is the matter of chance

The participant discussed the various aspect of the topic as there is a secret to being lucky and it has nothing to do with chance. It has to do with choice. Those who are lucky start with the thought and the idea that they are lucky. They believe in themselves and generally have high self-esteem. Lucky people tend to be well balanced and genuinely happy. They see the glass as half full. They, most generally, see opportunity in every challenge and believe they can do whatever they set their minds to do. In a word, lucky people are optimistic.

Pessimistic people tend to see the world as a challenging place where people are out to get them. They believe that, if something is going to happen, it most likely won't be good and the only kind of luck they seem to have is bad luck. Pessimistic people every silver lining has its cloud.

Most optimists tend to temper their optimism with a dose of reality and realize the world isn't perfect. They choose to focus on what works. The focus of the optimist is on what is good about the world and the people in it. What we focus on and think about in our lives is what we create. If we see the world as a place to have a great adventure where luck is around every corner, then that is what our world will be like.

Facebook an essential in today's life

Social network sites (SNSs) such as such as Friendster, CyWorld, and MySpace allow individuals to present themselves, articulate their social networks, and establish or maintain connections with others. These sites can be oriented towards work-related contexts (e.g., LinkedIn.com), romantic relationship initiation (the original goal of Friendster.com), connecting those with shared interests such as music or politics (e.g., MySpace.com), or the college student population (the original incarnation of Facebook.com). Participants may use the sites to interact with people they already know offline or to meet new people. The online social network application analyzed in this article, Facebook, enables its users to present themselves in an online profile, accumulate "friends" who can post comments on each other's pages, and view each other's profiles. Facebook members can also join virtual groups based on common interests, see what classes they have in common, and learn each others' hobbies, interests, musical tastes, and romantic relationship status through the profiles. Facebook constitutes a rich site for researchers interested in the affordances of social networks due to its heavy usage patterns and technological capacities that bridge online and offline connections. Hence as a whole we can conclude that face book has become a very important part of every one's life .

Hostel life makes a individual more independent

Hostel is a place where food and lodging are provided for students or certain groups of workers or tourists. Life in a hostel is different from the life in a home.

Students of various communities and religion, stay together in a hostel. Thus helps them to know about the various cultures of different regions. They develop a sense of unity in diversity and broaden their outlook. They learn

	the lesson of co-operation. Students face life practically on their own in a hostel. Life in a hostel instils confidence in them. They develop their personality. They learn to face the problems in life. They learn to self-disciplined, regular and punctual. They develop a feeling of respect for other religions and culture. They learn to help and cooperate with one another. They learn social etiquette and lead a better and disciplined life. Hostel life thus helps them to develop many good qualities and make the students good citizens. The whole session was highly informative and useful to students. It also helped in improving the communication skills and the thinking ability of students is also improved by gathering immediate information on any particular subject i.e. brain storming.
